

Knowledge, skills, ethics.

Skills

are acquired only through knowledge, proven in practice.

"What a client really wants is a lawyer who can put his knowledge into practice."

Frank Harrison Reynolds
State and Federal Criminal Defense Attorney

The Reynolds Law Firm, P.C.
Cooley Law School Graduate

The lawyers of today ... and tomorrow ... need more than knowledge of legal theory. Today's new lawyers must develop the skills critical to effective practice while in law school, and be ready to hit the ground running. Cooley Law School's rigorous program of practical legal scholarship trains outstanding advocates and superior writers. And every Cooley graduates' skills are tested in a hands-on setting, through our extensive in-house clinical programs and nationwide externships.
